12 Bailsford Prison houses prisoners who have committed serious offences. The prison guards have noticed a significant increase in fights and assaults amongst prisoners. The managers discuss implementing a token economy programme.

Behaviours such as 'being polite to others' and 'not getting into a fight for a week' will be rewarded with a token. These can then be exchanged for items from the prison shop once 10 tokens have been acquired.

When informed about the programme, prisoners complain that guards have their favourite prisoners, and the prison shop does not sell anything they want to buy.

Assess whether a token economy programme could help improve the behaviour of the prisoners.

12 Krystian is 19 years old and has difficulty dealing with anger and aggression. He has been in several fights with friends and strangers. Krystian claims he cannot remain calm when faced with a situation that makes him angry.

Krystian's sister says it is up to him to gain control of his own behaviour but Krystian blames his father who is currently in prison for assaulting a man.

The police have recently arrested Krystian for a third time and he has been referred to an anger management programme for help.

Assess whether an anger management programme could help Krystian change his criminal behaviour.

13 Jacob is a prison officer who is using a token economy programme with prisoners. It has been agreed with the prisoners to give them 10 credit points for each day that they show pro-social behaviour.

Once they have 100 credit points, they can exchange these for items such as extra time in the gym, extra food at dinner, or extra time in the social area.

Explain one strength and one weakness of Jacob using a token economy programme with the prisoners.
